of an historic building with the comfort of a modern facility. Bright and airy, the studio features a number of skylights and windows that blend seamlessly with the rustic charm of exposed-stone walls.

Owner and yoga instructor Charlie Phillips grew up in Drexel Hill and currently resides in Glen Mills. "Through yoga and bodywork, the studio is a place to be yourself and to release the expectations of what you should be," Phillips says. "In the yoga classes, the emphasis is on progress, not perfection. It's your yoga practice. It's not about whether you can force your body into advance positions, but about the connection that occurs between your mind and your body, and about loving yourself for who you are right now."

Also a certified Easlen massage therapist, Phillips describes this relaxing massage style as "based on classical Swedish massage and characterized by long lengthening strokes, gentle rocking and stretching, sculpting of deep musculature and a flowing style." Easlen massage was named for the Big Sur, Calif., institute where the method originated and evolved from a cross-pollination of various and diverse sources.

Wearing Hats Helped Other Children

The children at Hilltop Elementary School wanted to help children who are ill with cancer. They came up with a special fundraising idea — pay 50 cents to be allowed to wear a hat all day in school. Showing off their hats are the students in Courtney Preston's fourth grade.
